YOUR ENDOTOXIN EXPERTS ARE HOLDING THE FOLLOWING TRAINING COURSES:

Introductory Course

The Introductory course takes the delegate through all stages of Bacterial Endotoxin Testing (BET). Using a combination of theory and practical the delegate will gain a greater understanding of the assay and find ways that they can apply this knowledge in their own working environment. The delegate will also have the opportunity to view all testing methods and put theory into practice by testing and validating an unknown sample with their preferred method.

Topics Covered:

- What is LAL and how did horseshoe crab blood end up as a QC release test?
- Endotoxins – what they are, where they come from and why are they important
- Biochemistry of the LAL/endotoxin reaction
- Interferences and how to overcome them
- Specimen Characterisation and Validation
- Technician Qualification and Certificates of Analysis

Aimed At:

Laboratory technicians who have never attended a formal course or those that just want to gain a greater understanding of Bacterial Endotoxin Testing.

Advanced Course

The Advanced Course provides the delegate with a comprehensive understanding of the assay. The Advanced course has an emphasis on covering “hot topics” within the industry alongside, testing difficult samples, rules and regulations and OOS. The delegate will also get the opportunity to participate in round table discussions and review real data to identify the issues that have been seen and discuss ways of overcoming them.

Topics Covered:

- Interfering samples and how we address them
- Out Of Specifications in endotoxin testing
- Rules and Regulations
- Hot Industry Topics

Aimed At:

Experienced technicians or managers, those that have already completed The Introductory course, those who have a project or are experiencing difficulties in their testing environments or those who want to further enhance their knowledge of the endotoxin assay.
